HOMELAND REQUESTS
MORE TROOPS TO BORDER

The U.S. military has received a request from the Department of Homeland Security for active-duty troops on the U.S.-Mexico border, a U.S. official said on Thursday, after President Donald Trump said he was "bringing out the military" to guard against a caravan of Central American migrants trekking through Mexico. The U.S. official, speaking to Reuters on condition of anonymity, said the U.S. military was examining the request that could require deploying between 800 and 1,000 active-duty troops to the border to assist with logistics and infrastructure. The U.S. official said that any troops deployed to the border would not be involved in "law enforcement" activities, something that would be prohibited by a federal law dating to the 1870s. That law restricts the use of the Army and other main branches of the military for civilian law enforcement on U.S. soil unless specifically authorized by Congress. But the military can provide support services to law enforcement and has done so on occasion since the 1980s. Some specific statutes authorize the president to deploy troops within the U.S. for riot control or relief efforts after natural disasters.

SAUDIS SAY KHASHOGGI MURDER 'PREMEDITATED'

Saudi Arabia's public prosecutor said on Thursday the murder of journalist Jamal Khashoggi in the kingdom's Istanbul consulate this month was premeditated, reversing previous official statements that the killing was unintended. The death of Khashoggi, a Washington Post columnist and critic of de facto Saudi ruler Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, has sparked global outrage and mushroomed into a crisis for the world's top oil exporter and strategic ally of the West. The Saudi disclosure came after CIA director Gina Haspel heard an audio recording of the killing during a fact-finding visit to Turkey this week. The spy chief met President Donald Trump and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at the White House on Thursday, the State Department said. She had been expected to brief Trump on Khashoggi. Saudi officials initially denied having anything to do with Khashoggi's disappearance after he entered the consulate on Oct. 2, before changing the official account to say an internal investigation suggested he was accidentally killed in a botched operation to return him to the kingdom.

4,000-STRONG CARAVAN MOVES NORTH

Central American migrants heading in a caravan to the U.S. traveled on foot or atop vehicles in Mapastepec on their way to Pijijiapan in Chiapas state, Mexico, on Wednesday. Thousands of migrants crossing Mexico toward the United States in a miles-long caravan have resumed their long trek, walking for about 12 hours between destinations.

ALBANIA PASSES LAW
BANNING SPORTS BETTING

Albania's parliament passed a law on Thursday banning sports betting and other forms of gambling from the start of 2019 in a bid to tackle addiction among gamblers and match fixing in sport competitions, while also protecting household finances. The legislation, which passed with 75 votes from members of Prime Minister Edi Rama's Socialist Party, will force the closure of slot machine parlors, betting shops and all other forms of sports wagering including via online sites. It will, however, allow gambling at casinos in large hotels and a televised bingo game and national lottery will continue to operate because they have an ongoing concession. Albania's sports betting industry has grown rapidly in recent decades and has an annual turnover estimated at 700 million euros, stoking concerns about its impact on low-income families and the integrity of national sport. Rama, an artist and former basketball player, has led a backlash against the industry. "We are waging a frontal war with the evil entrenched deeply in our society over the years," he told parliament before Thursday's vote.

MATTHEW SHEPARD TO
FINALLY BE LAID TO REST

Two decades after Matthew Shepard was kidnapped and killed, turning him into an inspirational symbol for the fight against violence targeting gay people, his remains will be interred on Friday at the Washington National Cathedral. The Episcopal cathedral will host a service for the public, followed by a private interment ceremony in its crypt. Attendees are expected to fill the 2,500-seat nave and spill onto the front lawn. In October 1998, 21-year-old Shepard, a gay student at the University of Wyoming, was tied to a fence, pistol-whipped and left unconscious in the cold for 18 hours. Days later, he died at a Colorado hospital. The violence, said to be driven by his two attackers' anti-gay anger, shocked the country and led many states and the federal government to pass laws cracking down on hate crimes. His parents, Judy and Dennis Shepard, established a foundation to support lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender youth and to combat hate crimes. Both attackers received life sentences.

Design for bombs sent to Trump critics came from internet

A D.C. radio station said it had received a suspicious package late Thursday.

The investigation into 10 pipe bombs sent to high-profile Democrats and critics of President Donald Trump is focusing on leads in Florida, a federal law enforcement source said on Thursday, while another source said investigators believe the devices' design came from the internet.

All the suspicious packages were believed to have gone through the U.S. postal system at some point, the source said. Many of the packages had the return address of the Florida office of U.S. Representative Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who formerly chaired the Democratic National Committee, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The instructions for such explosive devices are widely available on websites and in propaganda distributed by militant groups such as Islamic State and al-Qaeda, said the second law enforcement official and a former federal government bomb expert.

Former Vice President Joe Biden and actor Robert De Niro on Thursday became the latest targets of the bombs, none of which exploded.

Later on Thursday, Washington, D.C. news radio station WMAL said it had received a suspicious package and its building was evacuated.

Authorities are investigating 10 pipe bombs sent to high-profile Democrats and critics of U.S. President Donald Trump with the focus on leads in Florida, a federal law enforcement source said.

A New York Bomb Squad unit exits the Time Warner Center, where a suspected explosive device was found after it was delivered to CNN's New York bureau. GETTY IMAGES

The bombs have heightened what already was a contentious campaign season ahead of the Nov. 6 elections in which Trump's Republicans will try to maintain majorities in the Senate and House of Representatives. The episode has also called attention to the harsh rhetoric Trump wields against his rivals.

Trump condemned the bombs but later blamed the media, his frequent foil, for much of the angry tone.

No one has claimed responsibility and the FBI urged the public to report any tips. The packages consisted of a manila envelope with a bubble-wrap interior containing "potentially destructive devices," the FBI said. Each bore a computer-printed address label and six "Forever" postage stamps, the agency said.

Some of the packages sent to New York locations had envelopes of white powder in them, but FBI Assistant Director William Sweeney said at a briefing in New York that initial analysis showed it was not a biological threat.

The pipe bombs discovered on Wednesday were similar to the ones sent to Biden and De Niro, a federal official told Reuters. Authorities described the devices as crude while security experts said their goal may have been to create fear rather than to kill.

One of the bombs was sent to the New York headquarters of CNN, which Trump has frequently derided for its coverage of him, and the network said on Thursday the device was being taken in a bomb-proof truck to the FBI lab in Quantico, Virginia, for analysis.

Leading Democrats said the bombs were a dangerous outgrowth of an antagonistic political atmosphere created by the president.

Trump and other Republicans have likened Democrats to an "angry mob," citing protests at the confirmation hearing of U.S. Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh.

The FBI said on Thursday one of the two packages sent to Biden — who once said he would have fought Trump if they were in high school — was discovered at a mail facility in his home state of Delaware and the second at another location. REUTERS

NYC Department of Small Business Services details a milestone in terms of helping businesses prepare for emergency events.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Cuisine by Claudette had only been open for six months before Hurricane Sandy hit on Oct. 29, 2012.

Located right on Rockaway Park, the eatery wasn't spared as the storm ravaged the Rockaways. "It was forced to shut down so soon after opening," said John Efrati, Cuisine by Claudette general manager.

After it reopened, the business was able to receive a grant from the city to help it bounce back from Hurricane Sandy and to prepare for other storms in the future through a program called Business PREP.

The NYC Department of Small Business Services first launched Business PREP (Preparedness and Resiliency Program) in 2015, offering workshops and webinars to business owners throughout the five boroughs that focused on how to handle and reduce loss during emergency events.

In 2016, the city expanded Business PREP with emergency readiness grants to businesses impacted by Hurricane Sandy and free on-site risk assessments to help business owners prepare for more extreme weather events.

Ahead of the sixth anniversary of Hurricane Sandy, the Department of Small Business Services has announced that Business PREP has awarded a total of $345,000 in grants to more than 115 New York City small businesses operating in flood zones.

"With Hurricane Sandy, we saw the paralyzing effect that weather emergencies can have on our local economy," said Gregg Bishop, department commissioner, in a statement. "It is imperative that, through programs like Business PREP, the city equips small businesses with the education and tools they need to withstand emergencies and continue powering our economy."

The program has been able to retroactively provide support for small businesses battered by the 2012 storm, like Cuisine by Claudette.

"There wasn't a lot of help after Sandy," Efrati said. "Insurance companies weren't paying anything. Small business kind of got stuck in limbo."

When he learned of the Small Business Services grants, he applied immediately, and was awarded $3,000. All Business PREP grant awards can be up to $3,000 each, the city said, to allow business owners to purchase resiliency-related items.

Aside from the 115 businesses that received grants, the Business PREP program has helped another nearly-700 city businesses develop emergency preparedness plans, officials said.

August through October is considered peak hurricane season in New York. The department is reminding business owners that applications are open at nyc.gov/businessprep or via 311 so even more New York City small businesses can get free risk assessments and grant awards.

Rally for Trump impeachment coming to FiDi

Capping off a week in which some of the president's most vocal critics received suspicious packages containing explosive devices, a Trump impeachment rally is planned for Sunday in Lower Manhattan.

New York that day, which could hinder the use of the "Trump Baby" balloon.

"Bring your best anti-Trump paraphernalia," Duncan Meisel, communications director for By the People, the activist group organizing the Trump impeachment rally, urged.

"The takeaway is that we're trying to impeach him. Allowing him to remain in office is allowing him to continue his high crimes," Meisel said.

Separating immigrant children from their families, not protecting women and LGBTQ individuals, his handling of the death of journalist Jamal Khashoggi and "open corruption" were among President Trump's "high crimes," Meisel said.

"Everybody understands that this needs to be stopped, and it needs to manifest itself in actionable protests," he added. "There has never been this many people who support impeachment, not even with Nixon."

When asked if he thinks a Trump impeachment is actually feasible, Meisel cited protests in South Korea in 2016 and 2017 that called for the resignation of President Park Geun-hye, who is serving a 25-year prison sentence after being found guilty of abuse of power and coercion.

"Over 17 weeks, 1.5 million people were in streets calling for impeachment. Despite very long odds at first, it succeeded," he said. "We see the path forward not as business as usual, but to continue mass protests and nonviolent actions to impeach this president and end his high crimes."

Burnt heroin spoon sculpture gifted to Mass. AG

The Spoon Movement thanked Maura Healey for her opioid crisis efforts with an unusual piece of activism art.

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

An 11-foot, 800-pound burnt heroin spoon sculpture meant to call attention to the opioid crisis was dropped in front of the Massachusetts State House on Friday morning, a gift to Attorney General Maura Healey from the Spoon Movement.

The Spoon Movement is a nonprofit meant to call out those in the pharmaceutical industry who are responsible for the opioid crisis and well as highlight those who are fighting against the crisis.

It was founded by gallery owner Fernando Alvarez and sculptor Domenic Esposito, who dropped the 800-pound burnt heroin spoon sculpture in front of Purdue Pharma in Stamford, Connecticut, back in June.

Now Esposito and Alvarez are gifting the sculpture to Healey as a thank-you gift for the attorney general's efforts to curb the opioid crisis. In June — days before the sculpture appeared at Purdue, but after production on the sculpture already had begun — Healey announced a lawsuit against Purdue Pharma specifically, suing them for the opioid manufacturer's role in the nationwide epidemic.

"When the lawsuit came out, I remember staying up pretty late into the night reading 77 pages of documents, and I said, 'This is amazing, this is the first time in any of the lawsuits someone is actually naming executives, naming the Sackler family specifically,'" Esposito said. "Lawsuits like what Healey is doing are tremendously important."

"Lawsuits like what Healey is doing are tremendously important."

Domenic Esposito, sculptor

With that lawsuit, Massachusetts became a leader in fighting the opioid crisis as the first state to hold pharmaceutical executives personally responsible for their role in fueling the epidemic.

Esposito created the burnt heroin spoon sculpture after his brother, who struggled with addiction for over a decade, overdosed. It's a dark symbol of his disease, he said — at the height of his brother's addiction, his mother would call Esposito, panicked, to say she found "another burnt spoon" — but it also shows the dark truth of the overall opioid crisis.

"Eighty percent of addicts will admit to having started on some synthetic opioid, like Oxycontin and Percocet. That's the link, that's why the spoon," he said. "You start off with this clean way of taking a drug ... and then you run out of money, because they're relatively expensive, and then you move on to heroin, and then it's basically game over."

Esposito wants Healey to know that the spoon sculpture is truly a gift, not a protest like when the Spoon Movement dropped the sculpture in front of Purdue. And he hopes she likes it, he said with a laugh.

"Not too many people are going to get an 800-pound spoon as a gift for their efforts," he said.

Friday morning's sculpture delivery was a surprise, Esposito said, and he hopes that the Spoon Movement can collaborate with the city of Boston and the state house to permanently display the burnt heroin spoon sculpture somewhere in the city.

Esposito will return the sculpture to his artist studio, he said, and hold it there until Healey decides what to do with the 800-pound gift.

They Might Be Giants'

John Flansburgh talks longevity and the band's 20th album, 'I Like Fun'

"Sometimes, when things go bad in the world people make a more concerted effort to seek out the thing that we are doing."

patrick.king@metro.us

They Might Be Giants may be one of the pioneers and figureheads on the theoretical Mount Rushmore of American Alternative Rock. The band — comprising of the songwriting duo John Flansburgh and John Linnell — has remained blazingly prolific in their nearly 30 years as a band with this year marking the release of their 20th album, "I Like Fun."

Throughout their career, the two Johns have found ways to keep their output interesting to themselves as artists. With their Dial-A-Song project, the band would ask fans to call into a hotline — and later visit a website — in order to hear a newly recorded song each each week. They took other detours as well, creating critically acclaimed and Grammy Award-Winning children's music and even writing for the "SpongeBob SquarePants" musical for which they were nominated for a Tony.

Metro caught up with John Flansburgh to talk about the new They Might Be Giants album and what keeps inspired after all of these years.

Congrats on your 20th album! Did you and John ever think that They Might Be Giants would have lasted so long and with such great success?

I think when we made our 18th album, we looked up "18th albums" on Wikipedia and were sort of trying to compare the quality and standard of our work to those albums. I haven't looked up 20th albums yet. This album has been very warmly received and gotten a lot of attention and I'm not exactly sure why. Sometimes when things go bad in the world people make a more concerted effort to seek out the thing that we are doing. I think a lot of people find it in a strange way very comforting because it's neither cynical or simple minded. I think that combination in the times that we are living in has kind of a unique appeal. I can't really say why. We worked hard on the record. But we've worked hard on other records that have not nearly gotten as much notice. So I can't really explain why it has done so well.

You guys always seem to come up with different angles in terms of your songwriting craft — like your Dial-A-Song project and your kids albums — do these projects give you more inspiration to create? Is it an act of cleaning out the artistic hive?

I don't know how to explain what we are doing, to be honest. I don't know if it is a good idea for bands to work as long as we have worked. It's been fruitful for us and it's been satisfying for us. It's been a ton of fun. We get to play shows and we get to record in fancy recording studios. All of those things are like a dream come true. I'm sitting in this really pleasant tour bus right now. It's hard for me to think that, after spending a decade in a van, "Oh, how can I carry on this way?" At the same time, people have different expectations. I think some people would find it very frustrating to be caught in the middle. Which is where our career is. Things could get a little bit better and feel a lot better for us, to be perfectly honest. Half the time we're still playing in clubs, and that's a different reality than playing in theaters. Playing in theaters is a much more comfortable place to be professionally. I don't like to complain. But I will if you'd like to hear it!

They Might Be Giants were one of the pioneers of bands moving to Brooklyn back in the day. Is it sad to see that this might be a thing of the past in a few years?

The thing about New York and the city in general is that everything is always changing. Sometimes it is changing for the better and sometimes it is for the worst. When I talk to people who lived in the East Village before it blew up, it's kind of the same story. New Yorkers are completely hypnotized by the idea of New York real estate. It's so often just the main topic. When you get down to it, it's such an inhospitable place to live that all everyone talks about is how to get through their apartment lives without going insane.

Brooklyn has changed tremendously since we started and I enjoy being in kind of a quieter place. I enjoy being the loudest thing in a quiet place rather than a loud thing among a bunch of really loud things. Brooklyn was definitely that in the '80s and '90s. It was such an obscure place! If I ran into somebody under 40 getting off at my stop on the subway I would stop that person and say "Hey, we should get to know each other! We both live in this very underpopulated neighborhood and all of the other people around here are in AARP. Maybe we should hang out?" That is certainly not the case anymore. It's just wall-to-wall artisanal everything. It doesn't make me sad. It's better than crack vials and drug rehab centers. Cities have to go one way or the other. If it's fancier than it was, it's probably better than being worse.

They Might Be Giants will be playing a hometown show at Terminal 5 tomorrow night.

Bryant Park's Winter Village reopens for the season on Oct. 27. ARGENTO JUSAY

The Winter Village is back

This Saturday, Bryant Park transforms into the Winter Village — here's everything you need to know (hint: you'll want to go on opening day!).

eva.kis@metro.us

Fall never seems to last long enough in New York City, but that just means we get to the winter fun faster. Among the many delights of the holiday season, there's nothing quite as magical as the Winter Village in Bryant Park — and it's back starting Saturday, Oct. 27 through March 3.

Now in its 17th season, the European-style outdoor market takes over the entire park, turning it into a winter wonderland of sparkling lights, shops and food stands nestled inside glittering glass-walled booths and lots of festive activities. Here's everything you need to know.

What's new?

This year's market will have 170 vendors including holiday gift shops and food stalls in addition to the usual Olympic-size ice rink and various activities and special events throughout the season.

There is one major addition for 2018: The Lodge, a food hall and post-skate cooldown area modeled after the Swiss après-ski chalets. Along with 12 restaurants, you'll find a festival cocktail bar and a more luxurious Champagne Bollinger bar. It'll be open daily, Mon-Fri, from 11 a.m.-8 p.m. and Sat-Sun, 10 a.m.-8 p.m.

If you just can't wait to get the holidays started, be among the first 100 people lined up at the rink on opening day at noon to receive a free skate rental, Bank of America knit gloves and hot chocolate.

One night you don't want to miss is the annual Tree Lighting Skate-tacular, taking place Dec. 4. Hosted by Alan Cumming, the night includes special performances including a routine by two-time Olympian Johnny Weir.

Holiday shopping

For the holiday shoppers, the Winter Village is NYC's largest outdoor holiday market, and also its prettiest — the whole park really does seem to sparkle even without snow.

The market is a great place to find stocking stuffers and warm-weather essentials, with a mix of local and international vendors including fine-art photos by You Are Here Studios, statement jewelry at Little Village Crafts and Mexican handicrafts at Un Pueblo.

The marketplace is open from Oct. 27 to Jan. 2, 2019, Mon-Fri from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. (Sat-Sun from 10 a.m.), though many stay open later on holidays and after Thanksgiving.

Food vendors

Located on the south side of the Winter Village and inside The Lodge is a collection of restaurants curated by Urbanspace. This year, you'll have 41 restaurants to choose from to recover post-skate or carb up for a shopping spree, including an outpost of the acclaimed Mah-Ze-Dahr Bakery, Chinese crepes from Mr. Bing and cheese-steaks by The Trufflist.

Come by on Tasting Tuesday (Nov. 6) to try bite-sized samples from most vendors!

Ice skating

One of the Winter Village's biggest draws is its massive ice rink, the only one in the city that offers free admission (though skate rentals will still run you $15). The rink is open daily from 8 a.m. until 10 p.m., and newbies can book a skating lesson.

And while the Winter Village marketplace will close on Jan. 2, 2019, the ice skating rink will remain open through March 3.

More holiday fun

Besides the shops, food and skating, the Winter Village is always teeming with activities. As it gets closer to Christmas, stop by Santa's Corner for a free holiday photo op with the big man in red and his helpers from Dec. 16-23, plus holiday crafts and caroling.

On Dec. 18, the New York City Opera will be caroling around the Christmas tree.

There's plenty of opportunities for free exercise at the Winter Village, too. Thursday mornings at 8 a.m., a figure skater or hockey player will lead Exerskate classes, while January and February will bring a Broomball league to the rink.

And for something different, wear your white-tie best to the annual Ice Ball, a prom on skates taking place on Feb. 1, 2019.

"The Ferryman" is now on Broadway. ALBERTO TANDOI

Genevieve O'Reilly on the success of 'The Ferryman'

The Irish actress talks bringing Sam Mendes and Jez Butterworth's play to Broadway.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"So it is so exciting to be here. It is always the way, we always see the excitement in the other," she adds. "That is which intelligible can always be the most exciting. I am sure American actors look at the West End in the same way."

O'Reilly believes that having nearly a year-and-a-half away from "The Ferryman" before returning for its Broadway run has only added to its depth.

"It is the same piece. We have come back to it and that has been such a joy. In the very act of returning it and re-rehearsing, and our long history all together, the piece grows more in depth," says O'Reilly. "It is a richer piece just because we have had the luxury of coming back to it. The piece itself is an Irish story and the themes in it are universal. It is really about family and love and loss and grief and pain and joy."

It is set against the Troubles of Northern Ireland, but it is about relationships and family. We haven't changed anything because that speaks to everyone, whatever your nationality," she adds. "That makes any audience anywhere an active listener, even though there is colloquial language in there. But Jez's writing is so rhythmical, it is almost musical sometimes. And Sam Mendes has stayed true to that."

But what does O'Reilly put the success of "The Ferryman" down to? "Forgive me, my answer is probably going to seem simplistic, but on the whole people have said to me that it was just a great night in the theatre," says O'Reilly. "They were surprised by how funny it was, how sad it was, and how it moved them to tears from laughter and emotion. It is just a great story. I think Sam is a great storyteller and so is Jez."

"They are such innate storytellers. That's what audiences love," she adds. "They love seeing a good story being well told. And there's also just the magical theatre in going to see it, too. It is something special."

O'Reilly couldn't help but wax lyrical about Mendes and Butterworth, too.

"They have such great respect for each other. They both really like each other, too. They are so passionate about this piece. Arm in arm they have combined to just tell this story in the best way possible," says O'Reilly. "The story of the play is at the center of the collaboration between the director, the writer, the designers, the actors, because the play is the thing. It is not about ego, being cool or interesting, it is just that the story has been at the heart of this experience."

"Great theater creates a world that you just believe in," she adds. "When it is done well, when it is done truly well, it is like a magic trick. Because it suspends your disbelief and it holds you and it rekindles that childishness inside you. I just love it."

Who is next on the trade block for rebuilding Giants?

The Giants fire sale is on, with plenty of names linked to possible moves.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The total rebuild of the New York Giants is on after the trading of cornerback Eli Apple and defensive tackle Damon Harrison earlier this week. It's just the start as ESPN's Jordan Raanan reported that anyone on the defense is up for sale for "the right price."

The decision to break up the defense is a casualty of the offense and management's ineptitude to field a competent product. This was the NFL's 10th-ranked unit just two years ago but has nose-dived since.

Most of it is because they are constantly kept on the field due to the offense's lack of execution, thus tiring the defense out. Even the best units will succumb to exhaustion and it has been a repeated theme since the start of the 2017 season.

With Apple and Harrison gone, veteran cornerback Janoris Jenkins is most likely next to go before the league's Oct. 30 trade deadline. At 29 years old, Jenkins has $14.75 million on the books for each of the next two seasons, which is a figure the rebuilding Giants would likely love to get off the books.

CBS' Jason La Canfora reports that the Pittsburgh Steelers, New England Patriots and Philadelphia Eagles are interested in adding Jenkins, who was a Pro Bowler in 2016 and has been aware of the possibility of him switching teams.

"It's a business, I understand that," Jenkins said. "But I'm here to play football and that's what I'm going to do every day."

On the offensive side, the possibility of trading veteran quarterback Eli behind a line that would allow him to stay in the pocket — would allow the Giants to usher in the future immediately, whether that means starting rookie Kyle Lauletta or drafting a quarterback in 2019.

The problem is that Manning has a no-trade clause in his contract, so he controls his own destiny on whether he remains a Giant through the end of his contract in 2019. What he can't control is whether the Giants bench him or not.

Other names like Olivier Vernon and even Landon Collins might crop up in trade talks over the next few days before the deadline. Outside of Beckham and Saquon Barkley, though, the general consensus is that anyone and everyone on the Giants roster is up for grabs.

Redskins vs. Giants: What to watch

Metro previews the Giants Week 8 matchup against the Redskins.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

All that's left is the crying.

The New York Giants 2018 season is officially over, another winnable game on Monday night against the Atlanta Falcons lost due to poor offensive execution and questionable coaching.

At 1-6, the Giants now head back home to take on the NFC East division-leading Washington Redskins on Sunday afternoon as the organization begins the process of just playing out the schedule.

But new head coach Pat Shurmur and general manager Dave Gettleman have a rebuild to administer, which means there will be a lot to look out for over the final nine games of the season.

Here is what to watch for:

WHO WILL BE LEFT?

The Giants look to be in the process of cleaning house as they trade clubhouse problem-makers and big-money contracts.

They kicked things off by trading Eli Apple — who had a tumultuous two-plus seasons with the Giants — to the New Orleans Saints before jettisoning fan-favorite Damon Harrison to the Detroit Lions.

Reports have indicated that the entire defense is up for sale which means we could see the Giants deal the likes of Janoris Jenkins, Olivier Vernon and even Landon Collins before the league's Oct. 30 trade deadline.

The suddenly short-handed defense won't be facing the stiffest test on Sunday, though. Despite leading the division, the Redskins offense has scored the second-fewest points in the NFC with 126.

A DIFFERENCE IN PHILOSOPHY

This is the perfect time for the Giants to test the entirety of its roster and find what works best for them moving forward.

Management's decision of a fire sale has indicated that the team is throwing in the towel this year, which means the Giants have nothing to lose in shaking up their roster. Most notably, that would mean benching veteran quarterback Eli Manning in order to see what they have in rookie passer Kyle Lauletta.

With nine games left, it should be a decent enough sample size to see if the Richmond product could be a quarterback of the future or if the Giants have to draft a quarterback in 2019.

But Shurmur isn't ready for that plan quite yet.

"It's not a nine-week tryout," Shurmur said. "We've got nine games left, play them one game at a time. Those are all things for people to talk about. We're moving forward getting ready to play the Redskins."

Jets face pivotal point in season in Chicago

For the second-straight year, the New York Jets are 3-4 and looking at a pivotal point in their season.

A tough outing against Kirk Cousins and the Minnesota Vikings last week, a 37-17 loss to snap a two-game winning streak, was a reminder that this franchise still has a long way to go before it can be a true contender.

However, head coach Todd Bowles cannot afford to see a repeat of last season in which the Jets followed a Week 7 loss with seven defeats in their final nine games.

Things don't get any easier for Gang Green as they head out on the road for the first time in almost a month as they meet the Monsters of the Midway, the Chicago Bears, at Soldier Field on Sunday at 1 p.m. ET (CBS).

Here is what to watch for:

JOE PANTORNO

MACK ATTACK

The Jets had a difficult enough time against a mediocre Minnesota Vikings defense that had an affinity for giving up the big play this year.

In their loss, New York was held to just 263 yards of total offense while rookie quarterback Sam Darnold had his worst game as a pro, completing just 17-of-42 passes for 192 yards to go with three interceptions. He now leads the league with 10 picks this year.

He'll have to forget about that bad performance quickly as one of the league's best defenses will be going after him on Sunday.

The Bears have the No. 8 ranked defense in the NFL, their third-ranked run defense much better than their pass defense. Yet All-Pro defensive end Khalil Mack, who has racked up five sacks in six games this year, leads a defense that ranks first in the league with a turnover percentage at 24.3.

Not only might Darnold be running for his life, but he'll have to hold onto the ball at all costs.

SHORTHANDED RUNNING GAME

The Jets received the unsettling news earlier this week that Bilal Powell, who ranks 10th on the franchise's all-time rushing list, is facing the threat of career-ending neck injury.

Normally, No. 1 back duties would continue to go to Isaiah Crowell, who has impressed during a majority of his first year with the Jets. Through seven games he has 459 yards and five touchdowns while platooning with Powell.

Crowell though is dealing with a foot injury that could see him playing with a snap count, though he was a full practice on Wednesday.

Rookie Trent Cannon could see his first real chance at seeing consistent snaps in the backfield come Sunday. He showed off his speed and agility last week against the Vikings when he amassed 69 yards on four receptions.

He'll be Crowell's main backup while the Jets wait for Elijah McGuire to come off injured reserve.
